

The Global Nexus is in play, but, for the first time in 500 years, the major global powers are not the driving element ...

This major new study looks at the integrated strategic theater which is “the RedMed”: the combined space encompassing the Eastern Mediterranean, the Suez Canal and Red Sea, and the Horn of Africa: a vital global seaway and increasingly important littoral states.

Each state and society in this zone is studied in context with the broad regional and global factors, by a team of analysts and subject matter experts.

■ The global impact of the Yemen war. ■ The potential and impact of a break-up of Turkey and Saudi Arabia. ■ The prospect for a new common market embracing the regional economies. ■ The underlying critical rôle of water. ■ The revival of Egypt as a key regional driver. ■ The return of the rôle of core civilizations. ■ The impact of the refugee explosion ... and much more.

The study was undertaken by the International Strategic Studies Association, the Gusau Institute of Nigeria, and the Water Initiative for Africa, and published by ISSA in February 2016.
